1. Whatever opinion the United States has for Yugoslavia and its struggle with Moscow, the United States cannot hesitate in rushing aid in case of an aggression by any bordering country supported indirectly or directly by the USSR. The United States, as a member of the United Nations did not question the relative political colors of the Korean Governments. The whole question was based on designation of an aggressor, therefore, the United Nations, and for it the United States, could not hesitate rushing aid to Yugoslavia, under threat of invasion.
2. It should be taken into account that the fact of aggression against Yugoslavia would signify the beginning of a world conflict, and possible repercussions of such a move would serve as a warning to Russia and its satellites. If the USSR wants war, any excuse will be good, but if, as is believed, the USSR does not want war for the moment, Yugoslavia will not be attacked.
3. Yugoslavia will not change its conduct and to avoid causing provocation of an kind, seeks to maintain itself independent from both Eastern and Western Blocs.
